

The CLA Licence allows copying, storing and sharing of extracts from most publications.

Copying

You may photocopy, scan or print extracts from most printed and electronic journals owned by or paid for by Central Government bodies. You can copy:

- Any amount of Crown copyright material, in accordance with the terms of the Open Government Licence
- Up to one chapter or 5% of a book, whichever is greater
- Up to two articles from a single issue of a journal or magazine, or several if they are on the same theme
- An entire case report of judicial proceedings
- Within these limits you may also make multiple copies and copies of copies

Storing

You can store copies for your own personal use and on a secure network for access by colleagues. You can store Crown copyright material as required under the terms of the Open Government Licence.

Sharing

You can share copies with work colleagues and staff in other organisations covered by the licence, including via email and on a secure network.

Remember

- Most published information you use at work is likely to be copyright-protected
- Copying under the CLA Licence must always be within these limits
- Crown copyright material can be copied by government departments without a CLA Licence. For information about Crown copyright see guidance on The National Archives website: www.nationalarchives.gov.uk

For all copyright queries contact your librarian or copyright adviser.

To check if you can copy a publication under the Licence, enter the title or ISBN/ISSN into the CLA's online Check Permissions tool:
